Chris Fowler and Adam Schefter said the Raiders will not be pursuing a trade for Alex Smith. Smith will be a Raider next season. (0:33) The San Francisco 49ers placed the franchise tag on quarterback Alex Smith on Tuesday, a source told ESPN's Adam Schefter, effectively pitting the San Francisco 49ers and Oakland Raiders against each other in the process of pitting the world against Smith and quarterback Derek Carr. In case the teams don't agree to a long-term contract with Smith and/or Carr, both teams have until July 15 to match the tag, which will cost them between $20 and $25 million of available salary cap space each. Smith will be 31 in February. Carr will be 29. After eight years in San Francisco, Smith decided not to opt out of the final year of his contract and plans on finishing his career with the 49ers. He told ESPN's Dianna Russini that he will not play elsewhere and that he would retire as a member of the 49ers. Smith's replacement in San Francisco is a big question, but for now, the 49ers have a hurdle in their way of securing the services of a familiar face.
